

LYRA

Into The Wild Marketing

Last 30 days

Generated 7/28/2026

Executive Summary

POSTS PUBLISHED

19

TOTAL IMPRESSIONS

251

TOTAL ENGAGEMENTS

13

AVG. ENGAGEMENT RATE

5.18%

BEST PLATFORM

LINKEDIN

Platform Breakdown

Platform	Posts	Impressions	Engagements	Eng. Rate
LINKEDIN	7	17	6	35.29%
INSTAGRAM	4	227	5	2.20%
FACEBOOK	4	7	1	14.29%
YOUTUBE	4	0	1	0.00%

Top Posts

LINKEDIN · 7/20/2026

Bigger clients. Higher fees. A brand with weight. You didn't start your firm to stay small — so stop marketing like you

13 impressions · 3 engagements

INSTAGRAM · 7/20/2026

Bigger clients. Higher fees. A brand with weight. You didn't start your firm to stay small — so stop marketing like you

91 impressions · 3 engagements

LINKEDIN · 7/27/2026

Trust wins clients — so show it. Great advice with a quiet brand loses to the adviser who's visible. Build authority tha

2 impressions · 1 engagements

Performance Analysis

Over the past 30 days, Into The Wild Marketing published 19 posts across four platforms, generating 251 total impressions and 13 engagements at an average engagement rate of 5.18%. While the impression volume remains low, the engagement rate signals that the audience actively responding to the content is doing so at a meaningful clip — particularly on LinkedIn, which delivered a 35.29% engagement rate across 7 posts despite capturing only 17 impressions. Facebook also punched above its weight at 14.29%, though its 7 impressions and single engagement make that figure statistically fragile. Instagram drove the bulk of raw reach with 227 impressions — 90% of the total — but converted at just 2.20%, indicating that while the platform is generating visibility, it is not yet compelling the audience to act. YouTube recorded zero impressions across its 4 posts, yet logged one engagement, which points to a tracking or attribution gap worth investigating before drawing conclusions.

The top-performing content tells a clear story about what resonates. The July 20 post — "Bigger clients. Higher fees. A brand with weight." — ranked first on both LinkedIn and Instagram simultaneously, earning 3 engagements on each platform. On LinkedIn it did so with only 13 impressions, a conversion rate that signals strong message-to-audience alignment. The July 27 LinkedIn post on building visible authority earned 1 engagement from just 2 impressions, reinforcing that direct, authority-focused messaging is consistently activating this audience. The pattern is not coincidental — both top posts challenge the reader's current behavior and position branding as a competitive lever, which appears to be the creative direction that earns the most response.

The immediate priority is scaling what LinkedIn is already proving. The platform is generating the highest engagement rate by a significant margin, and the top content is clearly defined. Publishing more frequently on LinkedIn with variations of the authority and positioning messaging should drive measurable engagement growth in the next cycle. Instagram warrants continued investment for reach, but the content strategy there needs refinement to close the gap between its 227 impressions and its 2.20% engagement rate — the audience is seeing the content but not responding to it at the rate LinkedIn users are. Facebook and YouTube should be monitored but should not absorb significant creative resources until volume and tracking issues are resolved.